IT DOESN'T MATTER IF YOU NEVER HEAR FROM HIM AGAIN... HE'S NOT THE LAST MAN ON EARTH!

DEAR DIARY, how do I get it over to all the ladies that they need to stop telling each other horsesh*t. Stupid stories about men! You're driving each other nuts and you're driving me nuts too.

And another thing ladies, have some boundaries and stick to them for God's sake! You're making it all too easy for the un-ambitious deadbeats out there.

My ex sister in law – the ex thing's a long story – exchanged telephone numbers with a guy at the Notting Hill Carnival on Sunday and she's still waiting to hear from him and it's now Wednesday, three days later. As far as I'm concerned, if he was 'that' interested, she would have heard from him by now so my advice to her is FORGET HIM. He probably has to get through at least seven other numbers and her name begins with a Y and if he's going through his names & numbers alphabetically, it could be a while before he gets around to her.

So I say, if he doesn't call you it's because he doesn't want to speak to you.

1. If a man you've dated once or twice sees you at a bar or club and gives you a half hearted hello, it's because he doesn't want anyone to know that he's associated with you, especially the woman or women within a stone's throw away. You standing near him all up in his face is killing his vibe. He didn't follow up after the date, so he's not interested in you. Leave him alone.
2. If you go out with your regular date and he sees a group of people he knows and doesn't introduce you, it's because he's not sure if he's keeping you around so you're not worth introducing.
3. If you sleep with him within six weeks of dating him, he no longer has anything to chase. Men like to reveal a worthwhile woman's layers like an onion; very slowly while making his eyes water with anticipation! If a woman just rips off all her layers and hands it over to the man in question, the chasing is over before it even begins.
4. If he dumps you because you won't give him sex within the first month, he wasn't worth having around anyway!

The AUGUST MAYFIELD Diaries

5. If he doesn't take you out and goes out with his friends, it's because he enjoys their company more than yours.
6. If he doesn't take you out and he sits at home alone watching TV, it's because he enjoys his own company and that of the TV more than yours.
7. When you first meet, if he makes you pay for anything that's not a gift, he doesn't value you and he's not a gentleman.
8. When he says he doesn't want to settle down or get married, he means he doesn't want to settle down or get married to YOU.
9. If he ends a relationship by saying 'it's not you, it's me', what he's really saying is Miss Ex Girlfriend, I'm going to dump you but I want to get away with it without you calling me a bastard.

Men are VERY easy to read. If he's interested, he'll call. When a man thinks that you're a treasure to be valued, he doesn't hide you away, confuse you or put you down, he doesn't do everything in his power to avoid being with you, he's not negative, rude or unkind, and he doesn't make you cry. In fact he tries to show you off to everyone, he wants you hanging off his arm, he makes you feel adored, he includes you in his life and makes plans with you. Got it?

The bad thing is that women get together, add sugar and spice to it, end up telling each other horsesh*t and then instead of telling a player to get gone, she gives him another chance to take the p*ss out of her because her friend's work colleague's sister's next door neighbour's niece ended up marrying the man who she slept with on the first date and although he never takes her out, he doesn't introduce her to anyone and he's hardly ever home and he acts like she's a very bad idea - they're still "happily" married.

LADIES, please stop adding sugar and spice to make everything nice. Make some high class dating rules and stick to them.
